VISION

YOUR BI-WEEKLY SOURCE ON THE RPI UNDERGROUND

The big 2-Oh!

By I

Folks, another milestone has been reached! Issue 20 of Tunnel Vision is here, the big 2-oh!

Besides that, very sorry for being a week late to releasing this issue, there was a lot going on last week and there was not much time to write. In any case, there were definitely some interesting happenings and cool finds over the past 2.5 weeks, including a 1960s TV, evacuation of the JEC and DCC, plenty of tunnel art, and more! Hope you enjoy this issue of Tunnel Vision!

What's new in the boxes

Ancient TV, many PCs in JEC

By I

Roger that, is probably something they said on Apollo

11. In the JEC this past 2 weeks, there was a TV so old it actually has a good chance of having seen the moon landing. And it was in great condition, too! (Well, before it was picked apart.)

Also seen were lots of older PCs and laptops, including an Apple Powerbook G3, and more!

Stoned Cat All Over Tunnel paper, Nixon Agnew '68?

By I

In the tunnels recently, Stoned Cat has made their mark!

Roughly 3 weeks ago, Stoned Cat came into the JEC-DCC tunnels and spray painted SC on almost all of the tunnel papers. We didn't have room to show it last time, but this time we've got some more photos!

Also in this issue, have the tunnel drawings started a campaign for Nixon Agnew '68? Plus, a possible frat feud? Finally, some fun art that has been drawn recently will be shown as well!

JEC and DCC evacuated

By I

Did you have class in the JEC or DCC on 9/28, between 4 and 6 PM? No, you did not. A suspected refrigerant leak evacuated these buildings, what happened?

Hockey-in-Exile

By JSL

Go Red! Go White! Go... somewhere else Friday night? It looks like the women's hockey team didn't even play at the Houston Field House for their first home game of the season.

The time and place of the women's game were changed earlier that week, instead scheduled for the M&T Bank Center in Schenectady at 2 PM, right around the planned release of this article before it was delayed.

Under Construction

By JSL/I

Expect delays, folks. The JEC-DCC bridge is closed yet again.

It's apparently temporary, and the school's meant to open it whenever possible, but with the stairs still unfinished, it may take a while.

Find
Of
The Week

The find of the week this week is another one which just seemed to come out of nowhere. A Zenith 13M15 B&W CRT TV! With a release date around 1965, it's been around for many-a historical events! The Moon landing, for one. I didn't dare turn it on, but it looked to be in pretty good shape! Of course, now it's in 2, but still in good cosmetic condition, just its guts are partially gone. Either way, be sure to check it out in LOW before it gets tossed if you like old TVs and stuff!

MOONWALK EDITION

Yep, this time we've had a lot more action. The JEC especially had lots of cool stuff dumped in over the past 2 or so weeks. Plenty of PCs, even one with a 5.25" floppy drive, an ancient TV, and old ThinkPads, along with even an Apple PowerBook G3! Unfortunately, the other tech dumps were pretty much radio silent, but even then this was a pretty solid week for the tech dumps! It always makes me wonder how there's still so much old tech around here, really awesome stuff! Let's hope the good times keep coming, but for now check out the pictures and tech dump listing for a summary of what's new in the boxes!

SOME COOL STUFF FROM THIS WEEK!

This TV might have seen the moon landing!

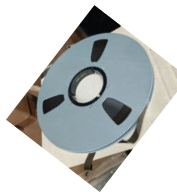

A PowerBook G3, broken but not forgotten.

A hard hat was finally added to comply with OSHA. Don't forget to wear it when checking the tech dumps!

Another good ol' IBM ThinkPad!

JEC

A lot of old PCs, the very old TV, Apple Powerbook G4, magnetic tapes, a whole lot of goodies this time around!

DCC

It's so barren you could almost call it Darren.

MRC

Pretty much the same, there's been a few more PC parts and wires here and there, though.

LOW/other

Many dumps consolidated again, check out the TV and other leftovers here!

Find some cool stuff? Send us pics!

NIXON AGNEW '68 EDITION

The tunnel artists have been hard at work lately! The tunnel papers have been almost completely filled up since last time! Since the start of the semester, it also seems like there's some kind of feud going on. The tunnel paper's been ripped multiple times now, exactly where ΣX had their taped-on letters. Could it be a possible frat war? In other news, is Nixon Agnew '68 running again? Many of the tunnel drawings have donned caps or said outright Nixon Agnew '68 for president. Seeing as this is a potentially important campaign, we will be reporting further on this if any new developments occur!

In any case, hope you enjoy this 20th edition of State of the Art, see ya in the next one!

SC rules, says the sign.

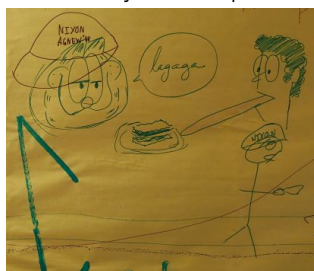

THE MOGGING IS COMING (for boykisser)! Courtesy of (probably) Stoned Cat.

A slanted Stoned Cat stares as you walk past.

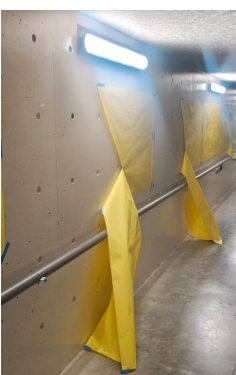

"Where's my Zine Guyz" Perhaps a coded message, expertly deciphered to: "Where is my Magazine Guys?" (more likely about GZine from last semester, but who knows?)

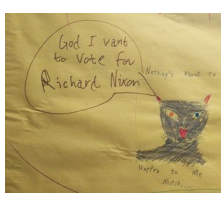

Garfelf likes Nixon Agnew '68 (he has cap)

Hey, this fella was in the JROWL tunnels in years past!

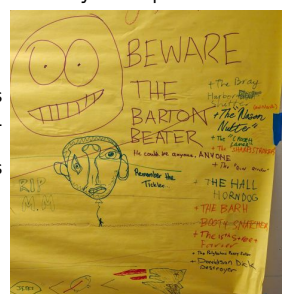

Some absolute CARNAGE on the WALLS as the paper was TORN APART where there were some markings of ΣX .

"God I want to vote for Richard Nixon" He seems like a trustworthy candidate, I don't see why not!

(Right): The list of infamous names extends to nearly all dorms now... what has this world come to??

POSSIBLE REFRIGERANT LEAK EVACUATES JEC AND DCC

By I

Something unusual happened on September 28th this year. I'm not sure if this is the best section to write this in, but it is technically out of the tunnel. Anyway, I personally was heading to the JEC around 4 PM on this day, and when I got to the JEC, I heard an alarm blaring in the loading dock and some people, including Pub safe and what looked like some building managers, were talking. I saw some people waiting outside, and relatively quickly some fire trucks (including a Hazmat truck?), an ambulance, and the fire marshal arrived on scene.

Initially, nobody knew what was going on, and there was only a handful of people outside. People were just standing outside in the drizzling rain or inside the JEC wind tunnel. After a few minutes, it appeared that the situation was concluded and it was probably just a drill, but that was far from the truth.

A minute or two after the first fire trucks were told they could leave, another fire truck arrived. This time, it was just them, but with this it was clear something more was happening. The first responders had talks and walked in and out of the JEC for some time, before all of a sudden, the DCC of all places, sounded its fire alarm. It sounded like an old school bell, and it was persistent. The fire department had to try multiple times to shut it off, eventually getting it turned off on something like the 4th or 5th try. It was around this time that the JEC was fully evacuated, and many more people were now outside. There was a bustle and general feeling of confusion in the air. Like the Titanic, there was also a band playing. For a few more minutes firefighters went in and out of the DCC and JEC, and we were all still in the dark on what was going on.

Finally, the RPI alert was issued around 5 PM, letting everyone know that there was a potential refrigerant leak in the buildings and they had to be evacuated. It took at least an hour, closer to 2 if counting the time that the first fire trucks arrived. By the end, the crowd had thinned to almost zero.

It appears that there was no injury or anything during this whole ordeal, thankfully, and those who had classes during this time probably got some extra free time that day. Unfortunately, no more public statements on the ordeal have been released as of 10/01, so we may never know if the potential refrigerant leak was real or a false alarm. Overall, a pretty unusual event! Have a look at some photos we captured during the event below.

Honestly there weren't many photo ops besides some of the emergency vehicles, but here are some more photos anyway!

~~RANDOM NEWS (HELL YEAH)~~

~~By I~~

Welcome back to ~~RANDOM NEWS (HELL YEAH)~~!

Just like that, the JEC-DCC bridge has AGAIN been closed... for who knows how long? Some experts say the bridge may have a scheduled reopening date coinciding with the opening of the time capsule by the Troy building, but this may be a bit of a conservative estimate.

Also, for those of you who are radio listeners, WRPI's transmitter is still mostly down from this past Spring, but things are looking up. Their antenna has been set up for occasional low power broadcasts, so they have actually been on the air recently! The audio quality was not 100%, but any air time is good time!

Hope you enjoyed this edition of ~~RANDOM NEWS (HELL YEAH)~~, we'll see you next time!

Extra: Hockey-in-Exile

By JSL

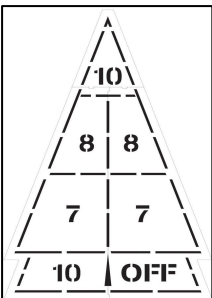

I'm a big sports guy and was really looking forward to the RPI women's hockey game last Friday night – but then a few days before the game, it got moved! Luckily the season hasn't been put on-ice, just on someone else's ice.

If you weren't aware, the Houston Field House was gutted for renovations this summer, and just like me, the school struggles to meet its deadlines and needed an extra few days to put in the new ice.

The team instead played at the M&T Bank Center in Schenectady, and despite the change in venue, we beat Northeastern 2-1 in overtime for our first win of the season! I'm sad I missed it.

That said, I've heard from the administration that our beloved home arena will be ready to go for the men's game this coming Friday, so I hope to see everyone there!
